

Loyalty Oath

Those who run American Mensa dearly need to rule without dissent, so as to speak in what they call “one voice.” To achieve this they recently created a loyalty oath, which all AMC members must agree to, that prohibits those AMC members from even commenting on anything they disagree with after it is established. They may discuss their differences in private, before any vote is taken, however once a measure is a done deal, they must remain mum about any opposition they may have to that legislation, so as to give the appearance that they, your stewards, all “speak in one voice.”

Which goes a long way to keeping everybody in line, eliminating dissent, avoiding individual responsibility, and, of course, keeping the membership in the dark. It works well. Just like it does in North Korea, Russia, China, Cuba, indeed, any totalitarian institution.
